

Introduction: During the 1800s the majority of Americans were white and Protestant and had been born in the U.S. Many believed that the U.S. should remain a white Protestant nation. Nonwhite, no protestant and immigrants often faced discrimination (unequal treatment because of their race, religion, ethnic background or place of birth.) The government rarely interfered with this discrimination. Using the American Journey pages 628-633 and answer the following questions and graphic organizers.
